THE GAZETTE.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 1, 1859.

A REPORTER'S JOKE. Morgan O'Sullivan, an Irishman, and a celebrated Parlimentary reporter, attached to the London Morning Chronicle, some fifty years ago, was as remarkable for his humor as his professional ability. Whenever any one offended Morgan, or got out of favor with him. he invariably retaliated in the way of some practical joke that generally placed his antag-onist in a very ridiculous position, and afforded the humorist satisfaction. In this way he once "got even" with two individuals at the same time who had excited his ire-namely, the celebrated Wilberforce, then a leading member of the opposition in Parliament, and one Jack Finnerty, a Parliamentary reporter of the Morning Herald. Finnerty was fresh from Tipperary, and quite unacquainted with the characteristics of the different members of parliament, but he received a good deal of gener us professional assistance at the outset of his career from Morgan O'Sullivan. On the occasion now referred to, Finnerty came into the reporter's gallery at a period of the night when the debates seemed to have slackened; he concluded to take a doze on one of the benches, and requested his friend to wake him up if any thing lively came before the House, and thereupon went off to sleep. Presently, Mr. Wilberforce got upon his legs and addressed a very thrilling speech before the House. As he progressed, a mischievous idea seized Morgan O'Sullivan, which, as soon as Wilberforce sat down, he proceeded to put in practice, thus.

Rousing Finnerty from his slumber on the benches, O'Sullivan exclaimed, "Jack, Wilberforce has just made an extraordinary "What about?" returned Finnerty. rubbing his eyes. "About the potato; the effect of it on national vivacity, the great virtues of it as an article of popular diet; proved that the finest kind of men were reared on it, far superior to the English." "Wilberforce said that, did he?" exclaimed Finnerty: "come, let me take his remarks in full from your notes," "With pleasure, my dear fellow," replied O'Sullivan, who commenced as if reading from a note-book, whilst Finnerty eagerly wrote after him in the following vein: "Mr. Wilbertorce then emphatically remarked that it always appeared to him be youd question that the great cause why the Irish laborers, as a body, were so much stronger and capable of enduring so much more fatigue than the English, arose from the surpassing virtue of their potato." "That's what I call eloquence," interrupted Jack Finnerty. Morgan resumed; "And I have no doubt (continued Mr. Wilberforce) that had it been my lot to have been born and reared in Ireland, where my food would have principally consisted of that inestimable root, instead of being the poor, infirm, shrivelled and stunted creature you, sir, and honorable gentleman behold me, I would have been a stout, athletic, handsome man, able to carry an enormous weight." "Well done, Wilberforce," exclaimed Jack, in high glee; "go on, Morgan." O'Sullivan then proceeded in the same vein of pathos and absurdity. but adroitly keeping within the bounds that Finnerty's credulity would swallow, until he had placed a most whimsical speech in the month of the grave and earnest Wilberforce. l'innerty, with many expressions of thanks to his brother reporter, started for the Herald office. On his way, turning into a tavern close by the House of Commons, where a number of reporters of the different morning papers were regaling themselves, Jack furnished them all with copies of "Wilberforce's speech," and the hoax-found its way the next morning into every paper in London, with the exception of the Morning Chronicle, to which as a matter of course, the correct report was furnished by O'Sullivan.

The public were astounded at the extraordinary speech which, according to all the papers, Wilberforce had made, and the general opinon was expressed that he was a candidate for Bedlam. The following evening, on the speaker taking the chair, Wilberforce rose and laimed the indulgence of the House-"Every honorable member," he observed, has doubtless read the speech which I am represented as having made on the previous night. With the permission of the House I will read it." (Here the honorable gentleman read the speech amidst the most deafening roars of laughter.) "I can assure honorable members that no one could have read this speech with more surprise than I myself did his morning, when I found the paper on the breakfast table. For myself, personally, I care but little about it, though if I were capable of uttering such nonsense as is here put into my mouth, it is high time that, instead of being a member of this House, I were an inmate of some lunatic asylum. It is for the dignity of this House that I feel concerned, for if the honorable members were capable of listening to such nonsense, supposing me capable of giving expression to it, it were much more appropriate to call this a theatre for the performance of farces than a place for the legislative deliberations of the representatives of the people." This was only one of the many instances in which Morgan O'Sullivan paid off, to his heart's content, members of Parliament and other potential personages who had, in some manner or other, provoked the waggish propensities of this incurable humorist.
